We Do Office

April 2020

This is an unprecedented time for most, if not all, of us. Due to the Coronavirus Pandemic, major events, landmarks and some businesses have been shut down. These are precautions that are necessary, not out of fear, but prevention.

Nothing is more important than the health and safety of our customers and our employees. DBI has taken the necessary precautions and a majority of our members are now working remotely from home. We are all in this together and, collectively, we have a social and moral obligation to protect ourselves and others.

DBI believes this crisis will demonstrate what is best with America and show the kindness, patience and moral fiber of our citizens. We hear about the hoarding and empty store shelves, but there are many more stories of neighbors calling neighbors to check in and groceries left outside the doors of our most vulnerable, the elderly.

DBI gives thanks to our customers and wishes for their continued safety and health.

Tips on Blending Work and Life

More and more, organizations and businesses are addressing ways to make worklife more attractive, easier, fun and interesting. To attract and keep top talent, it is important to create a sense of community that captures employees' personal interests and their relationship with others.

In addition to creating social spaces that encourage interaction and connectivity, think about offering extra-curricular training opportunities for your members. Perhaps a photography class, healthy cooking, a book club lunch or yoga sessions after work - the possibilities are as varied as the interests and backgrounds of your employees.

No matter how work and life blends for your organization or business, it all comes back to making the work environment comfortable, flexible, supportive and interesting for your employees' needs.

We Know Sitting

An ergonomic desk chair is often the most personal item in an employee's workspace; it should FIT the employee and adapt to their workstyles.

When 54% of our waking hours are spent at work and the majority of work is performed while sitting, the correct ergonomic support and seated comfort can make a vital difference in an employee's well-being and health. Chairs are available in a variety of options and price points, but here are a few critical features to look for in an efficient and ergonomic chair.

- Adjustable Seat Height
- Adjustable Back/Pelvic Support
- Adjustable Seat Depth/Seat Slide
- Adjustable Back Height
- High Quality Foam/Waterfall Front
- Adjustable Arms, Up/Down and In/Out Movement

Learn how Haworth's leading task chairs enhance the sitting experience by focusing on comfort and support for every body.
